Notable features:

Number 900 now serves as a church; its ground floor has been altered for a center door, and it is partially formstoned. Because of the clearance to the west of these buildings, they stand alone. They could be cleared to allow for a reasonable lot for a new building or increased open space. The front of the roof at number 900 was probably raised from a sloping roof (matching rear) to the current flat, to afford more head room on third floor.

Environmental context:

Fayette Street is busy and very noisy; needs street trees; vacant lots next door and across the street make ambiguous any rating.
